FROM PASTOR MICHAEL

Moving Beyond Fear

On Wednesday nights, there are some who gather in-person at the church and with zoom for soup, sometimes with a sandwich. Currently we are having a GREAT conversation about the book American Idolatry – How Christian Nationalism Betrays The Gospel and Threatens The Church by Andrew L. Whitehead. Whitehead's words and sense of what it means to be Christian in a world that is fear-filled call us to be faithful!

The kingdom of God inverts the power dynamics of the kingdoms of this world. [Jesus] did not come to be served but to serve and to give his life as a ransom for many. He commands us to give to those who ask. He commands us to give our cloak if someone asks for our tunic. He commands us to go two miles with the one who asks us to go one mile. He commands us not to fear but to respond with love to those around us—even if, and especially when, it might cost us our power, privilege, and comfort. We are to confront our fear by loving our neighbors and enemies through service and self-sacrifice, seeking the flourishing of all.

I don't know about you, but these commands scare me. I am afraid of being commanded to live according to these principles. It seems like counting ourselves among the marginalized, seeking their good, and not giving in to fear ensures that we Christians will be sidelined. It seems like a surefire way to invite others to take advantage of us. Moreover, it can seem like an inefficient way to live out the gospel and influence the world around us.

However, God does not call us to efficiency. He calls us to be faithful. Before going to the cross to give up his life in order to complete his rescue mission, Jesus was deeply afraid. Dying must not have seemed like the most effective or efficient means to achieve the end goal. His disciples certainly felt this way. Most of them embraced fear at what Jesus's sacrifice meant for them. Jesus, however, committed to trusting the upside-down nature of God's kingdom, and he transformed the world. In time, his disciples did the same.

These are difficult teachings. They do not align with the American ideals of individualism, power, comfort, safety, and security. The gospel animating Christianity is a lot more radical than most American Christians are likely to admit. It sure seems radical to me. And uncomfortable.

But it also sounds so beautiful. This vision always pulls me back in. I wish to see this expression of Christianity reflected in our organizations, in our nation, and in the world around us. Christian nationalism would have none of this sacrifice and service business. Christian nationalism demands we embrace group-level fear and threat. But by doing so, we betray the gospel.”¹

In these fall days, transitioning to winter . . . , days that are getting darker and shorter – let us not fall victim to those who would have us fear. In the darkness, may our words shed light, speak truth, and instill hope for the days to come. As Christians, we are called to be faithful, faithful to God/Spirit/Christ who are a constant companion. They give us courage, wisdom, comfort in the midst of sorrow, calm on the turbulent seas, a hope for the world to be.

May we know and experience the abundance of God, and out of that abundance be a people who lead.

Thanks be to God, Pastor Michael

How to Actually Help After Yet Another Mass Shooting

As of October 26, there have been 565 mass shootings in the United States this year, according to the Gun Violence Archive. That means there have been more mass shootings than days in a year.

Again, another shooting. In Lewiston, Maine eighteen people are dead, thirteen injured with an “assault rifle” in the hands of one person. Again, there are those who pray . . . and then say there is nothing I can do. I found Jillian Wilson’s article to be very helpful. I would encourage you to read the complete article that can be found on-line. The points below are from Wilson’s article.

1. Don’t let your anger fizzle out. - This feeling you have right now? Let it propel you in the weeks to come. Action is necessary all year round — not just in the wake of a horrific shooting.
2. Understand that mass shootings are just one part of the gun violence problem. Shannon Watts, the founder of Moms Demand Action says, “I am grateful that people decide to get off the sidelines after a horrific shooting tragedy. I am so, so grateful. But it’s important that they understand this is committing to the work of activism, and it’s also about looking at this issue holistically.” Mass shootings and school shootings get a lot of publicity, but they are just 1% of the gun violence that happens in this country, according to Watts.
3. Volunteer with a gun safety organization in your state. Gun regulations and legislation vary by state, which means what is going on with legislation in your area may be totally different for your friend 1,000 miles away.
4. Connect with a local community violence intervention organization. “There are a lot of partner organizations that we work with that are doing this work and have been, frankly, for decades with very little attention,” Watts said. Donate if you’re able to offer money.
5. Fight the narrative that guns make us safer. Many people believe the myth that guns make us safer — but the numbers show they do not. This misconception is a huge part of American gun culture, according to Nina Vinik, the founder of Project Unloaded, a gun violence prevention group.
6. Call or write your local representative.
7. Vote for candidates who support gun safety.
8. If you get involved, don’t forget to take care of yourself. According to Dr. Alexa Mieses Malchuk, a primary care physician at One Medical in North Carolina, gun violence — whether you experience it firsthand or hear about it on the news — affects your body and mind.
9. Don’t feel hopeless; it will lead to inaction. ,” Adam Garber, the executive director of CeaseFire PA, writes, “As long as we feel helpless, I think this is in politics in general, we give up our power in this moment. So, the choice to feel hopeful, to be helpful, is a reclaiming of the power that we have as citizens, and reclaiming that power means that we can take action to save lives.”

Faith Formation – You are INVITED To Think About and Have Conversations

One's faith, one's understanding of God, Jesus, Spirit, one's experience of trying to be faithful is not static – but it is always dynamic. Over the days, years, months of one's life – one's faith evolves, changes, and hopefully grows. Sometimes it diminishes. Faith formation is an intentional process of learning, reflection, engagement, change/transformation, and action.

Some suggestions Faith Formation activities:

- Book Conversations
 - Bible reading/study
 - Weekly Lectionary (Revised Common Lectionary three-year cycle of assigned readings) conversation
 - Authors addressing their faith
 - Emerging theologies and understanding of God
 - Understanding other faith traditions
- Topical Conversation
 - Faith in action
 - Issues facing us in our communities
 - Current events
- Spiritual Practices
 - Lectio Divina is a contemplative way of reading the Bible.
 - Meditation
 - Prayer
 - Exercise
- Faith Formation – Guided Conversations about “How I have experienced faith?”
 - Intentional conversations around table – after worship
 - Gatherings in homes
- Forum's and or Lecture series
 - Webinars
 - In-Person and Zoom presentations

When? – before worship, after worship, after fellowship, week day, morning, afternoon, evening

Where? – at the church, in homes, in a public setting (restaurant, bar/brewery, outdoor setting)

Members of the Christian Education Board (Esther Covert, Joanne Detwiler, Wendy Paul, Marge Koch) are inviting all of us to engage in a process, a conversation about the most effective ways to engage in faith formation activities.
